

News of the Unexplained

Arkham Sun

Volume 1, Issue 8      Sunday May 12, 1922

Fishing Village Controlled by Monster

The beast that destroyed the Order of the Silver Twilight fraternity house last month was spotted again by Arkham Sun reporters. The creature had made its way to Merriwak Island, a place long known to be cursed by New England sailors and the site of many shipwrecks and missing persons.

The creature had holed up inside an old mine, and was destroyed after being lured out of its lair. The monster defied description and was certainly some unknown prehistoric beast.

The folk of Merriwak seemed to be under some sort of control, and once the beast was freed went from sullen and secretive to warm and friendly. As reporters left the island, the church was being renovated with several non-

Christian items being removed.

This was a costly story, but one that deserves to be told. The people of Merriwak are freed, and it is once more a pleasant spot to visit.

Feeling Jittery? Unnatural Entities Causing Loss of Sleep? Try

Dr. Call's Morphine Tonic

- Eases jittery nerves
- Enables rest
- Enhances mood

Contains only the finest ingredients. Ask your Druggist for Dr. Call's Morphine Tonic!

Weather Forecast

Sunny and warm for the season, with some rain predicted later this week.

One of Our Own Lost

The triumph over the monster of Merriwak was bittersweet. Joseph Shoemaker, author of Human Death and Decay and other groundbreaking work in Forensic Science, was killed during the investigation.

The official cause of death is a mining accident, but this paper and our readers know why he really died. Because he dared to pursue the truth. He will be missed here at the Arkham Sun.

