

Dear Dr. Paul,

I am currently volunteering for your campaign in Bozeman Montana. I can't tell you how good it feels to support you in your run for the White House. I am not in total agreement with a few of your positions, but I am getting the truth through your honesty and conviction and this trumps all. I feel that what you're speaking for and so courageously speaking out against is what most of us here in the US and around the world are wanting, needing and craving whether they know it or not. "I'm in".

I have recently woken up to what has been going on in America and now feel so compelled to wake others too. Help them find and really get what's going on. Direct them to your message. However, I'm finding quite a few folks are open, but are suspicious about the seemingly "radical" ideas you're proposing.

People are waking up every day, but the learning curve for so many seems daunting. I've sent folks to view your videos on youtube and the likes, but quite a few are left with a sense of confusion and suspicion. Some are getting it, but I feel the ones who don't are having a hard time with the history. They are having a hard time letting go of what they believe to be true through most of a lifetime's brainwashing by the MSM's filtered agendas and by the parts of American history that have been so conveniently left out of our broken education system.

I am wondering if you and your campaign folks have given any thought, that because of your deep understanding of our history and it's relationship to the mechanics of how this crooked system was set up and continues to operate, that your message is getting somewhat lost. That you may be so close to all of this, you maybe taking it for granted, that others are following all of this as quickly as you can deliver it.

It's no problem for me. I so get it now, but it has come with a tremendous amount of time spent on digging for the truth. I feel time is of the essence and so many could be reached that are not because of what seems so foreign and complex to them.

Is there any way to break some of this down? Draw more parallels that general folks can relate to in their daily lives. Is there a better way to simplify the history and how it connects to the present moment we are living in? A simpler way of connecting the dots to our future if we continue the status quo.

I know you are working 24-7 on all of this and I don't mean to criticize your process. The things above are just observations from my experience of getting your message out so far. I would like to do a better job.

I hope any of this can be of some use in all of our efforts.

Thanks for all that you are doing.
Michael
